Will Give United States a Lead of 1.800 Miles Over Liver pool in Commerce.

If the United States is to get any Panama Canal, she must be prepared to meet and conquer powerful trade rivairy of other nations, especially Great Britain and Germany, according to a recent report to the Department of Commerce and Labor by Commercial Agent Lincoln Hutchinson.

Mr. Hutchinson holds that the mere opening of the canal will not produce expansion of trade in this country but Germany as the foremost competitors of this country, there will be numerous other competitors. He says that important rivals, but to a less degree than England and Germany, will be France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, and Russia. Holland and Austria-Hungary also con-tribute to a small extent to the trade with China and Japan.

Provide Markets.

On the other side of the equation will be the lands which provide a market for the goods of these various countries These countries, which import Amerian goods, fall into two distinct classes Those so definitely within the zone of Those so definitely within the zone of influence of the canal that the trade routes to them from the Eastern United States and Europe must of necessity be via the new waterway; those so situated that even after the completion of the canal there will be alternative rival routes still open for use.

To the former class belong the counties of the west coast of South America; the west coasts of Central America. The second class will include New Zealand and Australia, the Philippines and the Orient generally, with increasing influence of the canal as one passes up the Aslatic coast to Japan.

Mr. Hutchinson seeks to make it plain the Aslatic coast to Japan.

Mr. Hutchinson seeks to make it plain that if the United States is to get-large benefits in trade out of the canal its merchants must study conditions; they must understand the limitations of the new route; moreover, there must be intelligent knowledge of the trade and trade conditions of the lands that are to come under the influence of the new waterway.

American merchants must know who their rivals are, what sort of goods they handle and, in short, be prepared with full knowledge of the entire situation in order that they may not go about their business blindly and in the dark.

Battle of Markets. What he says, in a most exhaustive analysis of the conditions that will obtain after the canal is opened, is in the nature of a warning to America to prepare for a great "battle for the mar-kets." He discusses this with special reference to England and Germany as idering England and Germany as the really important rivals of the l'nited States. Mr. Hutchinson says England occupies in a way the position of vantage and defense, and that generations of experience have given her traders a skill that is hard to match. On the other hand, the success of Eng-lish trade has given her traders a con-servatism that is to her disadvantage. "Germany and the United States." he tors, Mr. Hutchinson concludes that when the canal is opened the trade of all the west coast of the American con-tinent will increase, and that the growth of the American share of it will be even more marked. In other vords, he expects America to get more than its proportion of the west coast trade. He thinks the canal will give America no help of importance as to Chinese trade. But he believes it will help American trade with Japan. He points out that, with the opening of the canal. New York, instead of being 1,888 miles farther from Japan by sea route than Liverpool, will be 1,880 miles pages than Liverpool.

miles nearer than Liverpool, will be 1,880 miles nearer than Liverpool. Compared with the German ports. New York's advantage will be even greater.

In other words, New York will have an advantage of about 1,800 miles over Liverpool, and German ports with respect to Liverpool. spect to Japan trade. Obviously, all At-lantic and Gulf ports of the United States will be thrown closer to Japan by water route. "It is altogether probable that the opening of the new route will be followed by a stimulation of American Japanese trade which will soon out the United States in close rivalry with England for the first place," says Mr.

general conclusion of Mr. utchinson is that the United Sta is going to be put in a peculiarly strong position by the opening of the canal.

"Germany and the United States," he observes, "represent the attacking forces in this struggle for markets."

He points out that the growing German population forces that nation to seek markets, that Germany has built up a powerful mercantile marine, and that it has established banking connections in many countries.

But he concludes that, considering competition as it exists today, England has "a certain considerable advantage" over both the United States and Germany. This is due to its immense financial and commercial preponderance in most markets; its long experience as a trader: the widespread knowledge of the excellence of British products; and the universal reputation of British merchants for square dealing.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 20, 1912.-"1 had eczema for the last twenty-five years, and have been afflicted so badly that for weeks I could not go outside the door. My face was one mass of pimples, and not only the looks of it but the itching and burning pains I experienced were just dreadful. I lost a great deal of sleep and had to keep dampened cloths on my face all night to relieve the pain. I had become disgusted with frying different things.

"One day I made up my mind to try Resinol, and after using one jar of Resinol Cintment, and one cake of Resinol Soap, I saw the difference, and now my face is as clear as anybody's and I certainly don't need to be ashamed to go out. Resinol Soan and Resinol Ointment cured me of one of the worst cases of eccema, I guess, that anybody ever saw." (Signed) Mrs. C. Hellmuth, 5611 Ap-pletree Street.
